(PDF) The problem of peace: understanding the 'liberal peace'

The debate still revolves around a post-liberal peace, problems inherent in liberal peace and emancipatory, hybrid forms of peace. Gray (2007) argues that, in a "global crusade for human rights", pre-emptive war would be used to create a new world order, which would lead to the rise of authoritarian regimes.

Liberal Peace and Its Crisis: The Revival of Authoritarianism

Liberal peacebuilding is characterised by certain features and assumptions. The first is that it is often driven from above, driven by external actors, justified as apolitical, and benevolent. The assumption is that the problem is internal, but the solution is external. There are many definitions of peacebuilding.

Challenges of Liberal Peace and Statebuilding in Divided ...

'Liberal peace' theories argue that there is a strong tendency for domestic and international peace to follow when the large majority of individuals in a society have control over decisions in both political and economic issues. The theories assume common people have a self-interest in peace, since they normally can obtain material and non ...

The Limits of the Liberal Peace - PRIO

The 'crisis' of liberal peace has generated considerable debate in International Relations. However, analysis is inhibited by a shared set of spatial, cultural and temporal assumptions that rest on and reproduce a problematic separation between self-evident 'liberal' and 'non-liberal' worlds, and locates the crisis in presentist terms of the latter's resistance to the former's ...

A Liberal Peace?: The Problems and Practices of ...

The basic thesis is that liberal democratic states tend not to go to war with one another, because of the structural and/or normative features of liberal democratic states. That is, liberalism as such is directly responsible for the miraculous track record of peace that we've seen post-World War II, especially in Europe and North America.

The Rise and Fall of Liberal Democratic Peace Theory ...

The democratic peace theory posits that democracies are hesitant to engage in armed conflict with other identified democracies. Among proponents of the democratic peace theory, several factors are held as motivating peace between democratic states: Democratic leaders are forced to accept responsibility for war losses to a voting public;
